

Via Ferrante rock climbing campout
November 12-14
2010

Recently our troop went to Via Ferrante rock climbing campout in Kentucky. They left bright and early on Friday morning and headed down the highway. They stopped for lunch at a rest stop and then continued the rest of the way to Kentucky. When they arrived, they were greeted by the Climbing instructors and were briefly taught how to climb and safety. Then they headed up on the rocks in the beautiful weather and climbed. The rest of the afternoon was left for them to climb all the difficulties they wanted on the rocks. Eventually they came down and headed off to a pizza place for dinner. Warm and full, they headed back to the campground and set up camp. They spent a little time around camp then hit the sack for the night.

The next Morning they woke up early and ate breakfast. They then prepared for their day where they would be going on a hike.

They hiked the Natural Bridge trail and went to Lovers Leap. They got back to camp later that afternoon and spent the rest of the afternoon hanging around, talking and playing games.

That night, they had an Iron Chef competition. The winner was Beef Stew and it was delicious. Finally there was a campfire and snack and everyone enjoyed talking and being together on the long weekend. The next morning they woke up to another beautiful day and took down camp. After discussing the weekend they headed to the cars and headed off for Hudson. The boys got home that afternoon after a great weekend with perfect conditions.
